Tenerife y la unión ibérica. Los portugueses en la laguna y su comarca (1575-1650) (Thesaurus) (Spanish Edition) Javier Luis Álvarez Santos

Es un tópico bien establecido en la historiografía insular la importancia que tuvo la presencia extranjera en la colonización de las Islas Canarias, en su doble vertiente de poblamiento y de puesta en explotación; así como el posterior desarrollo de relaciones comerciales que estuvieron, en parte al menos, en manos de extranjeros. Lo que vendría propiciado por la situación del Archipiélago en las rutas que conducían tanto a los puertos del litoral atlántico de África como a las Indias.

El objetivo de este trabajo ha sido averiguar y conocer las características esenciales de la presencia portuguesa en Canarias en tiempos de la Unión Ibérica (1580-1640). Para este cometido, se ha abordado este tema desde un punto de vista social y económico para, finalmente, tratar los mecanismos de inmigración e integración, así como los vínculos y redes que se establecen entre portugueses.

El estudio se ha restringido a la isla más poblada y con mayor proyección internacional. Y más concretamente, a la ciudad de La Laguna por su condición de capital y, por ende, centro de la vida pública e institucional. Por su parte, en cuanto al ámbito cronológico se ha tratado un periodo algo más extenso que el que abarca la propia unión política de las tres coronas peninsulares, desde 1575 hasta 1650. Se ha pretendido con este intervalo de tiempo interpretar la evolución de las relaciones entre ambos espacios dentro de un contexto de complementariedad atlántica, más allá de la propia diplomacia hispánica.
