Salud, familia y vínculos (Spanish Edition) Elsa Mabel López

El sistema de protección social de los países de América Latina, especialmente el que ampara necesidades sociales, económicas y de salud, no cubre de manera satisfactoria las necesidades de las personas mayores, lo que determina que una gran parte de ellas deba obtener recursos de diversas redes sociales, principalmente la familia. La importancia del crecimiento de la población mayor y los efectos del envejecimiento demográfico sobre el sector de la salud, además de otros factores socioculturales igualmente relevantes, como las relaciones intergeneracionales y los apoyos que reciben las personas mayores son aspectos poco explorados en la Argentina. Este libro se propone difundir los resultados de una investigación social realizada en el Área Metropolitana de Buenos Aires sobre las percepciones que tienen las personas de 60 o más años sobre su salud, los cuidados que dedican a ella y los vínculos que establecen con los servicios de salud, sus familias y sus allegados. La información se obtuvo a través de diversas encuestas y entrevistas en profundidad. El estudio de estos temas es de gran interés para las políticas públicas y constituye la base para las ayudas que las personas mayores requieren, ya que las redes son instancias que sirven de soporte a numerosos estímulos, promueven la sensación de pertenencia, favorecen la integración social y evitan el aislamiento.
